

Shirebiz Bulletin 27th July 2020

Ausindustry July Update

Free webinars on business building processes and details of the Entrepreneur's program.

See

Australian manufacturing has been in terminal decline but coronavirus might revive it

The widespread shutdown of global supply chains caused by COVID-19 has been good news for some Australian manufacturers. See examples.

Australian Guide to digital transformation

Operating a business online has never been more important. To help you get it right, the Australian Government has developed the Guide to digital transformation. The guide is a step-by-step tool that walks you through the process of going digital in your business.

Survey to assist Austrade improve its digital services

Help Austrade improve its digital services for exporters. Austrade is creating new digital services to help more Australian businesses grow through exporting, diversify into new markets and manage their risk throughout the export journey. The survey can be accessed here.

The Sydney Quantum Academy to locate at Redfern

The Sydney Quantum Academy (SQA) is an innovative research, education and business model, drawing on the combined expertise of four Sydney-based universities to support the development of a quantum economy in Australia's largest technology and innovation precinct.

Tapping into Quantum Computing to study genetic disease

Researchers at the University of Virginia School of Medicine say they are tapping into the potential of quantum computers to help us understand genetic diseases. Details here